ICFS | INDIA CLEAN FOOD SUMMIT 2026

Introduction

India's food system is at an inflection point. As farmers seek more sustainable ways to grow food, businesses adopt new technologies and models, and consumers become more conscious of what they eat, questions around food safety, processing, transparency and trust are becoming increasingly important. The conversation around food must therefore move beyond individual products and claims to the people, practices and systems that shape what India grows, makes and eats.

The India Clean Food Summit 2026 marks the beginning of the "Clean Revolution" - India's next big food revolution: a collective shift from quantity to quality, and towards food systems that are cleaner, safer, more transparent and built on evidence and trust.

The summit brings together policymakers, regulators, academia, industry leaders, farmers, FPOs, food businesses, retailers, investors, financial institutions, chefs, influencers and other voices shaping what India eats. Each conversation is designed to examine a different part of that journey –from making clean food mainstream, to establishing scientific standards, enabling capital, and shaping consumer culture.
